

Gouging on Babies' Milk

Our Assemblyman Vincent Thomas has indicated a crucial battle is in the offing between grocery stores and drive-in milk marts.

The drive-ins rock the consumer two cents a quart less than the retail outlets. Organized grocers are raising a fuss, contending the competition is unfair.

We never believed we'd see the day that government would take cognizance of fair competition as distinguished from unfair. Competition is competition, but this is another case in which the government will prove to be far more concerned with enriching the supermarkets than helping the wage earner.

The winners will be the more powerful, with more influence on the legislators. This is basic politics. The loser will be the worker. This is just as basic.

The markets' beef is that they must compete with drive-in milk outlets at a severe disadvantage. If the disadvantage is that severe, why compete? Do the cigarette-machine operators complain because weeds are a nickel-a-pack less in the drugstore?

The whole future of the milk-control act could hang in the balance, the markets are contending. Excellent. Let the whole thing be abolished, along with all other controls that keep prices at a ridiculous high.

If a company can afford to give the housewife and her children a break, more power to it.

Any consumer of milk (we are not one) should immediately contact his state legislator and insist this attempted gouge by the markets be overthrown. Otherwise, the dairies will have the perfect right to put in bread counters and insist on a law forcing you to pay excessive prices.

Let us toss off government regulations and compete. If the loser fails, fine. Under this present system, every consumer is the loser.
